Alameda County Takes Action to Reduce Carbon Footprint

Changing the mindset of our community from depending on gas guzzling, green house gas emitting cars to using public transportation is no easy task, but that is exactly what Alameda County is doing by providing a free shuttle service for all Alameda County employees.

“The purpose of the Alameda County Center Shuttle is to get people out of their cars, use public transportation, protect the environment, and improve the quality of life in Alameda County,” Supervisor Keith Carson said during the ribbon cutting ceremony on Thursday, October 15th.

Alameda County strives to lead the way in creating efficient and sustainable policies and procedures. The Alameda County Center Shuttle will provide a safe means of getting to and from work to BART at dawn and dusk; encourage employees to take advantage of the BART train for a stress-free commute; and cut the County’s carbon footprint by reducing the smog-forming emissions that are released on daily commutes to and from work.
